He heard quiet steps behind him. That didn't bode well. Who could be following him this late at night and in this deadbeat part of town? And at this particular moment, just after he pulled off the big time and was making off with the greenbacks. Was there a crook who'd had the same idea, and was now watching him and waiting for a chance to reap the fruit of his labor? Or did the steps behind him mean that one of many law officers in town was on him and just waiting to pounce and snap those cuffs on his wrists? He looked around. Suddenly he saw the alley. Like lightning he darted off. He was aware of the two warehouses almost falling over the trash can lying in the alley. He nervously tap his way along in the inky darkness and suddenly he saw a door. He would have to go back the way he had come. The steps got louder. He saw the outline of a figure coming around the corner. Is this the end of the line? He thought pre-emptively. He pressed himself back against the wall trying to make himself invisible in the dark. Was all that planning energy wasted? He was dripping with sweat now, cold and shivering. He took off his clothes. Suddenly next to him, with a barely noticeable squeak, a door swung quietly to and fro in the night's breeze. Could this be the haven he'd prayed for? Slowly he slid toward the door, pressing himself more and more into the wall, into the dark, away from his enemy. Would this door save his hide?
